Paul Hudson Mack is a life-long Michigander and dedicated Detroiter. His work has spanned social impact, entrepreneurship, urban revitalization, applied behavioral science, education, and business management. He has applied his skills in a broad range of contexts, from start-ups and grassroots organizations to executive leadership teams and global enterprises.

Paul grew up in Owosso and Brighton. In 2006, Paul graduated from Michigan State University with a B.S. in Human Biology and a B.A. in Philosophy. In 2009, Paul came to Detroit and Wayne State University for his Masters in Social Work, Macro Practice Focus. Having fallen in love with Detroit, Paul stayed and worked in education for four years including as a Teach for America corps member in Detroit Public Schools. In 2015, Paul shifted his focus to human capital consulting, working for three years for Deloitte helping organizations build and execute strategies rooted in real people's needs. An active community member, Paul relaunched his neighborhood block club, helped found two non-profit organizations (Detroit Horse Power and Intertwined), and serves on the Wayne State Social Work Alumni Board.

Paul lives in a historic home that he bought off the demolition list in 2011 and restored. He has two young daughters, Cora and Elsie, and is passionate about raising his girls in the city, bringing together diverse people together around shared goals and values, and supporting inclusive growth across Detroit.
